

Our Greek Myth

A long time ago, there lived a terrifying monster called the Cerberus. The Cerberus's teeth were as sharp as a sword and his tail was as long as a tree trunk. The fierce, sharp-clawed Cerberus had long, venomous snakes on his smooth back. The Cerberus devoured all humans and ate them for his lunch.

In the scary, dreadful underworld, the evil Cerberus lurked around his lair waiting his prey. The lava sloshed around like liquid in the washing machine to pull people from land and the burning hot fire was spreading really fast.

One foggy evening, a hero named Lloyd crept to the Cerberus's lair. Lloyd's spear was as sharp as a shark's tooth and his shield was as strong as a meteor. Strong, armoured Lloyd was feeling powerful and confident to fight the three-headed Cerberus.

As quiet as a mouse, Lloyd crept closer and closer to the Cerberus. With his spear in his hand, Lloyd thrust the weapon into the Cerberus's bloody, gory torso. The Cerberus began to howl as loud as an elephant's trumpet and it really hurt. Blood came rushing out like a waterfall crashing into rocks. Finally, Lloyd's perilous adventure was over so he returned back to his people and a celebration was thrown and someday he will venture off again to fight another monster.
