

The Midnight Fair

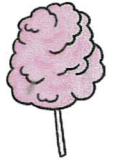

One mysterious night, the joyful, eager animals lurked in the distance patiently waiting for every person to leave and the owner to lock up the fair. When the fairground closed, two naughty, smart raccoons found a small gap in the strong, wiry fence and curiously peered it back so all the other animals could sneak through. "Follow me into the fair!" beckoned the raccoons joyfully.

Once inside the fair, the raccoons found a lever and slowly pulled it. As quick as a flash, the whole of the fairground came to life with bright, multicoloured lights and music that played gently round the fair.

With excitement in their eyes, all the animals happily ran in different directions eager to go on their first rides. The tiny, speedy bumper cars hashing together causing the bear to go crazy and wanting to go again and again. Twirling, terrifying swings that twirled around like a spinning top and scared the bunnies as they watch from the ground in terror. Then, most of animals hopped on their seats of the rapid, exhilarating rollercoaster, it zoomed high and low with the raccoons that had nerves in its body.

As their tummies began to rumble, a few animals decided to get some delightful, mouth-watering treats for them all to eat. The badger found a stall and he served a big toffee apple in his mouth while the deer ate a soft delicious doughnut. The squirrel nibbled on some swirly sticky cotton candy and the wale ate Sugary, Sweet popcorn. After eating all the good, the animals were staged!

As the gun continued, the owl kept watch for the sun rise. Instantly, he notice the first slither as the sun rise peeking over the tree tops.

"The sun is rising!" He hooted loudly.

"Okay, It's time to leave," cried the bear.

Without hesitation, panic began to fill their bodies and the animals quickly picked up their prizes and packed away their treats. They returned to the fence and went through the familiar gap.

As the sun began to rise, the exhausted, gratingull animals disappeared into the dark, shadowy forest and wild in their sleepy, cozy den ready to sleep. They kept dreaming about the lovely time they had.