

Little Red Riding Hood

As the sun peeped over the horizon, Little Red Riding Hood skipped down the pebbly path. "Hello little girl," said a mysterious voice in the shadows.

"Oh, hi do you know the fastest way to my grandma's house?" the little girl asked.

"Well if you are going to grandma's house you are going to get lost because you are going the wrong way," the wolf replied pointing his sharp claw the other way.

Little Red thought about grandma and how she would be waiting so she gave a nervous grin while she skipped down the path as the wolf mouth into an evil grin.

Meanwhile, the wolf sprinted to grandma's house also trying to think of a daring plan to make her rethink letting him in. Then, finally the creature arrived at the old lady's house and gave a gentle knock while his eyes glistened with excitement. As soon as grandma opened the old door, the wolf lunged at her and the second he dug his uneven teeth into grandma's leg she crumbled to the floor in despair. But why would the wolf do this?

Once he had finished his meal, he decided himself as grandma to trick Little Red Riding Hood. Not long after, there was a small knock then the door creaked open and in the daylight was Little Red. "Hi grandma, I brought you some cakes hope you like them! Wait grandma are you shure your ok you look a bit... different?" exclaimed Little Red Riding Hood.

"Oh, hello dear, I am fine. Can I have a hug?" replied the wolf.

"Granny, what fierce teeth you have!" screeched Little Red Riding Hood.

"Well you do need sharp teeth to eat you!" hissed the wolf. As he spoke last time, he sunk his dangerous teeth into her leg, and ripped her for shreds. Then, when Little Red let out a scream a woodcutter came to rescue her but she was already gone. But then, he realised he was not hungry, so he called is pack to finish him off. While he was taking a nap on grandma's bed the wolf felt bad for little Red at least he has his new house.
