The polar bears with the softest and whitest fur went for a stroll. When he got to the horizon he saw a strange looking boat that was glowing with lights across the horizon and there were two weird shadows dancing about. They were coming across to the snowy cold island with music on and sharks from every direction. Those bizzare characters got close enough to see they had bubblegum pink skin, with a tail like a sping and smooth ears that flapped down on their face. Next to them were some sort of blobs yellowy blobs. They were Aliens!! It was astonishing! No ones ever seen such a thing.

As soon as they stepped onto the island, their dirty bellys rumbled from the inside of their peach colored stomachs they began to gurgle. They had no clue their vegetables didn't grow in Antartica. What were the tired farm animals to eat now? "I'm famished!" "and I haven't even had breakfast" say the pigs. They search high and law like a detective for hours. They remembered they put food in the party boot for this spijic occasion but their boat had floated off in to sea! Their only slither of hope was some one to save them. "Lets hope some one gets to us intime." the pigs say dramatically.

Out of No-where. the creatures heard a loud, tormenting thud and a strange glassing saucer appeared from the sky dropping all Sorts of veg including carrots, broccoli, cucumber and a little bit of sweetcorn. As they got closer, they got nervous util they realised the person in the passenger seat look familier it was the one and onley farmer Joe. "Thanks so much" cried the pigs jumpiny. Eagally, the piglets Stepted towerd into the dilbutt, glittery tractor beam and set off home. Finally, they took the last turn to their home-land with all the food they could imagine then sat in the pig cage and had a wonderfull feast of veg and cupcakes for the aliens. "Yum." they exclaimed. They waved the aliens good farwell and wished them a safe journy home.
